FROM THE WESTERN COAST.

Politics in California and Nevada—The Cause for Division—Mob Spirit on the Coast—The Prevalence of Lynch Law—Low State of Public Morals, &c., &c.

Correspondence of the Indianapolis Daily Herald, Austin, Nevada, August 2, 1865.

Mr. Editor:—The "Great Republic" party on this Coast has resolved itself into two of its original elements, and each of these have chosen names as indicative of its principles as any other circumstances. "Long Hairs" and "Short Hairs" will occur to your readers as ludicrous names of party nomenclature. But as neither faction represents any distinctive ideas, it is natural that something should be chosen to indicate the difference, either in a name, an emblem, or both.

And no more fitting person could have been selected for the task of defining the distinction than the barber. In truth, if the leaders of either faction, and many of the rank and file had their deers, the shaving operation would be extended to the heads of both. It is now, generally, in the case, a mere struggle for office. You may always safely count on California and Nevada for the Administration whatever its politics.

The troop of Federal appointees have an overshadowing influence and are ready to carry both States when united. Just now, they are especially exercised over the election of United States Senator to fill the place of McDougal. Low, the present Governor of California, is the champion of the "Short Hairs," and Sargent, former member of Congress from the same State, is the favorite of the "Long Hairs." Most of the "primaries" have been organized with special reference to one or the other of the trials; and in Sacramento they had a regular row in the County Convention, in which chairs, inkstands, knives, pistols, &c., were freely used, resulting in several broken heads, and a split in the Convention, and the nomination of two tickets.

A feeling against the Federalists in California is too rampant, too much absorbed in the pursuit of wealth, to hesitate between the choice of money, place and power, and adherence to convictions of right. The Southerners, who at the commencement of the war were most rampant in their denunciations of "secession," and swore they would fight for the South in the defense of money, place and power, and adherence to convictions of right. The Southerners, who at the commencement of the war were most rampant in their denunciations of "secession," and swore they would fight for the South in the defense of money, place and power, and adherence to convictions of right.

The mob spirit is especially rife on this coast. The newspapers not only wink at it, but they advocate it. Even though the courts of justice are open, and no complaint is made against their efficiency, the penchant for the summary proceedings of Judge Lynch is so frequently manifested by the hanging of some victim obnoxious to the populace as to excite little attention and no other comment than approbation from newspapers.

The other day three men were murdered in this State near Egan Canon, and two men were arrested charged with the offense, examined and recognized to answer at the District Court. The only paper published here advised them not to bring the accused to the county seat for trial, but to hang them at once, and thus save the county the expense of a trial. A few days after another man was arrested and charged with the same offense, and the paper published here advised them not to bring the accused to the county seat for trial, but to hang them at once, and thus save the county the expense of a trial. A few days after another man was arrested and charged with the same offense, and the paper published here advised them not to bring the accused to the county seat for trial, but to hang them at once, and thus save the county the expense of a trial.

The paper here in ignorance of the facts of the last case until the prisoner was en route for the jail when it was too late to impose its accustomed advice to "have expense," at which it complained somewhat petulantly.
